The Serbian favorite has a tough fourth-round challenge against the Polish star.

Djokovic underlined his credentials as the tournament favorite by defeating Stan Wawrinka in straight sets on Friday's last scheduled game.

Currently ranked 18th in the world, Hurkacz beat 14th seed Lorenzo Musetti in a hard-fought straight-set clash to set up today's tie.

These two players have met on three previous occasions, with Djokovic winning all three matches. The most recent meeting was a 6-3, 7-5 victory for the Serbian star at the Dubai Tennis Championships back in March.

The main favorite to win his fifth consecutive Wimbledon title, Novak Djokovic, will face a tough challenge on Sunday. He will play against Hubert Hurkacz, one of the best tennis players in the world, especially on grass.

Djokovic has looked very solid since the start of Wimbledon. Against Wawrinka, he clearly was the superior player, although he had to level up in the third set to close the match in time and not have to play on Saturday. Against Hurkacz a close match is expected, but the Serb, who has a perfect 5-0 record against the Pole, is expected to advance.

Hurkacz is ahead of a monumental task, but he has the tools to make his opponents suffer in this surface. His powerful serve must be the key if he wants to take down the record-man. He reached this stage without losing a set.

Djokovic remains untouched in the quest to get his 24th Grand Slam title. He's also chasing multiple Roger Federer's marks, so he is showing his hunger every day. His tournament so far has been spotless, winning in straight sets each one of his matches.
